SBL Staff Audiobook Recommendations

- 32 Yolks: From My Mother's Table to Working the Line by Eric Ripert, recommended by Su
 - Eric Rapier, celebrity chef, tells the story of how he went from an unknown French boy to one of the world's leading chefs. I enjoyed the ups and downs and final success of Chef Rapier's story, and only wish he could have been present cooking.
- The Almost Sisters by Joshilyn Jackson, recommended by Su
 - Who would think you could laugh out loud at a story that starts with discovering your Grandma's very long dead husband in the attic, and she's not the least upset about it? I laughed, I cried and enjoyed the sweet Southern accent of the author who reads her own work.
- Aristotle and Dante Discover the Secrets of the Universe by Benjamin Alire Saenz, recommended by Cait
 - This is a coming-of-age story about two teenage boys in the Southwest in the 1980s, made spectacular by its narrator, Lin-Manuel Miranda (of Hamilton fame). Often, the narrator can make or break an audiobook experience for me, and this is my favorite listen of all time.
- Bridge of Clay by Markus Zusak, recommended by Rosanna
 - Set in Australia, this is the story of the four Dunbar boys after their mother has died and their father has left. It also looks at love and horse racing.
- Deacon King Kong by James McBride, recommended by Megan
 - Set in 1969 Brooklyn, the story starts when an elderly church deacon, known as 'Sportcoat', inexplicably shoots the neighborhood drug dealer, mid-day, with no shortage of witnesses. From there you meet a huge cast of unforgettable characters (all with great nicknames) and learn how their stories are all connected to each other, and the neighborhood at large. I highly recommend this one on audio, as it is narrated PERFECTLY by Dominic Hoffmann, who does a wonderful job switching between voices and accents and bringing the story to life. If you're like me you'll find yourself sitting in the driveway a few minutes longer because it's just too hard to stop listening.
- The Help by Kathryn Stockett, recommended by Rosanna
 - A young white woman writes a book with the black domestic servant of a white friend. The story shows the interactions between "the help" and their employers as well as the home life of many characters.
- Nothing to See Here by Kevin Wilson, recommended by Cait
 - A young woman agrees to become the nanny to her former best friend's step-children but oh, she forgot to mention, the kids spontaneously catch on fire when they're upset. A laugh-outloud funny story about weirdos finding their place in the world.
- The Oregon Trail: A New American Journey by Rinker Buck, recommended by Rosanna
 - Two brothers travel the Oregon trail in a wagon pulled by mules. This shows a slow trip across the United States today with plenty of opportunities to discover strangers hardships and regional traditions.
